The Hidden and the Revealed: The Queen Esther Mosaics of Lilian Broca

One of the most exquisite series of mosaics in contemporary art is celebrated in a newly released, lavishly illustrated large format book entitled The Hidden and the Revealed: The Queen Esther Mosaics of Lilian Broca. Published by Gefen Publishing House of Jerusalem and New York, the book marks the culmination of a journey that began in 2002 with the first completed work in the series.

In a stirring testament to the significance of Broca's masterpiece, renowned American artist and feminist Judy Chicago writes in the book's preface: "The Queen Esther Mosaics by Lilian Broca contribute to the vital historic task of what the biblical scholar Naomi Graetz called for in S/He Created Them: Feminist Retelling of Biblical Tales (Chapel Hill, NC: Professional Press, 1993): '...to put woman's voice back where it should have been in the first place.'" The ten monumentally sized works in the series retell the biblical story of Esther in dazzling detail, using the finest of Italian colored mosaic glass, plus gold leaf and other precious materials. The work won the prestigious Lorenzo de' Medici medal at the 2003 Florence Biennale.

In addition to showcasing the spectacular mosaics, the book includes a chapter by art historian Sheila Campbell comparing Broca's interpretation of the Esther story to that of other artists such as Rembrandt and Artemisia Gentileschi, and a highly evocative epic prose poem written in the voice of Esther by rabbi and scholar Yosef Wosk.

Research Interests

My current research concentrates on Cilicia and Isauria (i.e. Asia Minor north of Cyprus), addressing the question of what does it mean to be Roman in these areas. This question of identity can be addressed in many different ways. Although in literature Isaurians are a well-stereotyped ethnic grouping, with a clear identity (at least, as perceived by outsiders), how is this represented materially? And is Isauria significantly different in its material culture to other regions of the Roman Empire? These questions are addressed through the Göksu Archaeological Project, an interdisciplinary multi-period survey in the Taurus Mountains (www.biaatr.org/goksu). The five-year fieldwork was completed in 2006, followed by study seasons in 2007-2008, to be followed by publication. This project provides contextual information for a number of previously excavated sites (Alahan, Aloda, Dağpazarı) as well as recording low-lying areas threatened with flooding by a planned dam near Mut. Changes in regional culture are explored between the Paleolithic and the Ottoman periods, though focusing in particular on the fifth century AD, when a local, Zeno, became Roman emperor. I am also writing a book on Cilicia and Rome in the Late Roman Empire. This work covers the third to seventh centuries AD and focuses on what it meant to Cilicia and Isauria to be a part of the Late Roman Empire. These consequences are discussed thematically, with chapters focusing on cities, the economy, the gods, the emperor, etc. There is no book-length study of this region in the Roman or Late Roman periods. Nor have late antique scholars focused much on the problems of 'Romanization'. Draft chapters have been favorably reviewed by OUP though no contract has yet been issued.

My first book, Warfare in Roman Europe: AD 350-425 (Oxford University Press, 1996; paperback 1998) examined the development and interaction of the military systems of Rome and her European enemies during the decline of the late Roman Empire. This produced several important conclusions, that the barbarian threat had little coherence, and that when compared with Roman forces, the military capacities of the barbarians were low and did not improve during this period. The problem of defining what it meant to be Roman was highlighted in the discussion of the 'barbarization' of the army, where it was shown that the recruitment of soldiers born outside the empire has been exaggerated in both its extent and impact. Relationships between Romans and non-Romans were also covered in my short monograph, Frontiers of the Roman Empire (published by Batsford and Indiana University Press, 1996; selection of the History Book Club in the US). Here, the Roman frontier was examined as a series of overlapping zones (civil, economic, and military) with attention paid to both sides of the border. By defining these various zones, it thus becomes easier to understand Roman identity. I have explored the same theme of identity in a number of prosopographical articles on Roman army officers in late antiquity (Fravitta, Illus) and on ethnicity (review article, Romania et Gothia; Nature of the Sixth-century Isaurians).

I have also focused on similar questions of definition in collaborative work. In 1989, with John Drinkwater, I organized an international conference on 'Fifth-Century Gaul: A Crisis of Identity?', asking participants to assess the state of Romanization in Gaul in the fifth century AD. The proceedings were published by Cambridge University Press. I organized another focused international conference in 1997 with Gary Reger, titled 'Regionalism in Hellenistic and Roman Asia Minor' at Trinity College, Connecticut. Here, we asked participants to examine the ways in which regions were defined in Asia Minor. The proceedings have been published by Ausonius Press, France. Last, I organized a panel at the 1999 APA Meeting, concerning 'Insiders and Outsiders in the Late Roman Empire'.

The Chronicle of
Pseudo-Zachariah Rhetor

Church and War in Late Antiquity

Edited by Geoffrey Greatrex and translated from Syriac and Arabic sources by Robert R. Phenix and Cornelia B. Horn, with contributions to the introduction
by Sebastian P. Brock and Witold Witakowski

In January 2011 the translation of The Chronicle of Pseudo-Zachariah Rhetor: Church and War in Late Antiquity, Translated Texts for Historians 55 (Liverpool, 2011) appeared. It was the work of my collaborators, Rob Phenix and Cornelia Horn, while I dealt with the commentary and introduction; Sebastian Brock and Witold Witakowski also both contributed. In April I received a SSHRC standard research grant for a new project on Procopius: I am intending to undertake a detailed historical and philological commentary on the Persian Wars, which, I hope, may be published by Cambridge University Press. In the summer I attended the Byzantine Congress in Sofia (see the attached report) as well as the International Patristics Congress in Oxford in August. There I gave a paper on Theodore Lector and ecclesiastical historiography in the sixth century in a workshop organised by Peter van Nuffelen (Ghent) on sixth-century history-writing. In Sofia I gave a short communication on Theophanes' account of the Anastasian War (502-506).

This last year, I organized a session for the Annual Meeting of the Renaissance Society of America held in Montreal in March on ‘Early Modern Hellenisms: Constructions and Networks,’ and also served on the organizing committee of a one-day symposium in honor of Linda Seidel (‘Challenging the Myths of Art History: A Symposium in Honor of Linda Seidel’ held at Fordham University, New York, in February). For the Annual Meeting of the Universities Art Association of Canada, held in Ottawa in October I co-organized a session on ‘Pre-Modern Approaches to Vision and the Senses’ and presented a paper called ‘Unexpected Afterlives: The Translation and Translatio of Two Byzantine Books in Paris.’

For the Byzantine Studies Association of North America, I was elected to the governing board last year and this year I serve as the vice president of the organization.

This will be my third and final year serving on in Medieval Academy of America committee that selects the MAA sponsored plenary speaker for the International Congress on Medieval Studies in Kalamazoo. This year we selected the eminent Byzantine art historian Annemarie Weyl Carr. One of the main highlights of my year was the privilege of offering the introductory remarks for her phenomenal plenary address.

Linda Safran, Toronto

Linda Safran is at PIMS again this year as a Visiting Fellow. She has co-authored the introduction and guest-edited, with Jill Caskey and Adam S. Cohen, a special issue of Medieval Encounters 17 (2011), which also appeared as a separate volume under the title Confronting the Borders of Medieval Art (Leiden: Brill, 2011). She published two articles, 'Public Textual Cultures, A Case Study in Southern Italy,' in Textual Cultures of Medieval Italy, Essays from the 41st Conference on Editorial Problems, edited by William Robins, 115–44 (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2011); and (with Galit Noga-Banai) ‘A Late Antique Silver Reliquary in Toronto,’ Journal of Late Antiquity 4, no. 1 (Spring 2011): 3–30. Her review of A. M. Yasin’s Saints and Church Spaces in the Late Antique Mediterranean: Architecture, Cult, and Community (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2010) appeared in CAA.reviews (www.caareviews.org/reviews/1633). She lectured on ‘Orthodox Baptism: Sites and Scenes,’ at the ‘Looking East: A Window on the Eastern Christian Traditions of Epiphany’ conference at the Institute of Sacred Music at Yale, where she also co-curated (with Vasileios Marinis) a photo exhibition titled ‘People, Piety, and Sacred Power in the Eastern Mediterranean.’ She helped organize the Canadian Conference of Medieval Art Historians (CCMAH) in Toronto in March. Linda has been awarded a one-month postdoctoral stipend at Dumbarton Oaks in March 2012.
