PRISONERS’ STRUGGLES

We Conceive Justice

Jason Tighe Fong

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Jason Tighe Fong is a Kamilaroi man, incarceration survivor and poet. He co-founded Beyond the Bars Art to provide First Nations men an outlet to express themselves and their creativity after leaving prison. Jason reads his poetry at First Nations deaths in custody protests and stands in solidarity with his brothers in prison.

POEM

We conceive justice, as innocent till proven guilty, not vice versa

We conceive justice
as never being held captive inside a million-dollar prison machine where money is its only interest the rest is left to mess

We conceive justice
where officers of the law and prison can stop mistreatin us for some of their misgivings perceivin us as paycheck decisions

We conceive justice
as having realistic incentives real goals to aim for more positive reasons to wanna live so when we are released it’ll be possible to be productive an asset to our community like the very few we grew up with

We conceive justice
where all society are aware there can’t be rehabilitation without optimistic incentives there

We conceive justice
where we’re not herded up like cattle branded a number then thrown to the slaughter to rattle

We conceive justice
where we’re all communication all on an equal plain where both sides come together to understand but band together to comprehend

We conceive justice
where Indigenous inmates, mainly the younger who may feel displaced, stressed grief or whatever made mandatory to see them straight away by a couple of brothers or sisters to speak to, have a yarn with or just be there as listeners so their aware, they’re not alone know their supported together we will sort it instead of postponed till next mornin

We conceive justice
where there’s more positive support networks for any country brother in the city thinkin they alone, no self-worth the same for city brothers on country earth yes, we will conceive justice and will keep seeking justice till that brighter day when finally, maybe just finally justice can and will conceive us