I am a 33-year-old Ojibway-Métis woman. I have been incarcerated since I was 18 years old and I am currently enrolled in a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology through Laurentian University. I have been part of the Walls to Bridges (W2B) community since 2015. I believe that the work that W2B does is transformative and life changing. I am passionate about advocating for the voiceless in carceral settings and this piece of work represents that. We are each other’s voice regardless of social standing, gender, culture, religion, orientation, etc.

2020

I found the COVID-19 lockdowns inside to be a really difficult time – creating this piece gave me an opportunity to reflect and unwind. Knowing that my fellow outside collective members were still behind me helped me to feel less alone. The collective is more than the valuable education work we do – they are my extended family. I am honoured to be a part of this movement.
